

Lead On

Poetry

*"Sit!" my gentle giant barks.
A forest of legs above my head:
Like shifting trees, marching by.
Bursts of yellow, green and red,
Switch and shimmer in the air,
A restless rainbow, just hanging there.
Pause as metal beasts roll by
Until, at last, the traffic slows.
A shining being, dressed in green
Commands the human pack to go.
We surge across the road as one
While shining eyes keep looking on.
The people herd along the path,
My stumpy legs begin to tire.
If only I could soar and fly
Above the trees, or even higher.
Sounds and smells help me revive,
I sense, at home, we'll soon arrive.
I've exercised enough today,
The length and vastness of my world.
So now I head straight for my bed.
And follow my tail until I'm curled.
My eyes look sad, but I feel no sorrow:
I'll have another walk tomorrow.*
